

David & Grace's Salvation and Calling

David Im

God gave me the privilege to be born as a pastor's son. It allowed me to grow up in the Word of God from an early age. I knew Jesus and the gospel of salvation so well that I thought I was saved. But when I turned 14, I realized that I had only known Jesus by knowledge, but I hadn't made Him Lord of my life. I felt safe with my family and attending all the church meetings. I knew that Jesus loved this world, but I had never seriously considered that I was a sinner before a holy God and that He loved me. I was able to realize that in a conversation with my father, and it was during this time that I accepted Jesus as my Savior and Lord.

Since then, I have continued to ask God what I should do, and He has given me the opportunity to be involved in various children and youth ministries in the church, work in educational institutions, and manage soldiers in the Marine Corps. Through this, God has given me the burden to evangelize the upcoming generation and train them to be strong warriors for the Lord. Our nation is losing the next generation. The next generation that seriously loves God is dwindling exponentially. We need churches and schools that are reaching children with the love of Jesus, nurturing them in the Word, and training them to be good soldiers for God.

I grew up in the church from a very young age. Growing up in a Christian home, worship and the gospel were very familiar to me. As a teenager, I called myself saved, but I lived a life that was different on the outside than on the inside, and I was torn between the different values I learned in church and what I learned in the world. In the midst of this, Bible college in the States. During the summer of my junior year, God allowed me to travel with a traveling singing group, and it was at one of the meetings that I realized that I was not saved and was the leader of my life. That night I finally accepted Jesus as my Savior and the Lord of my life. God has given me an abundance of grace and love where I have fallen short and has guided my life.

Through my chaotic adolescent experience, He gave me a burden for youth and educational ministry, which was concretized through my husband. I want to share the gospel with children in a confusing world and help them find God and find the right values in their lives.
